Description:

"Double Noir" is a video animation made of 60 sequences relating a man pursuing his own double.

Using deconstruction by tampering with film stills taken from eighteen Humphrey Bogart noir movies and by transferring them into drawings, a new movie narrative is formed. The act of drawing is preceded by the selection of the movie sequences and then individual frames taken from them are drawn in white chalk on a blackboard. These drawings are then photographed and erased with a sponge. The same blackboard is then used for the next drawing. Each blackboard stands for one movie sequence. The only lasting drawing document of this complex undertaking is the drawing of the last frame of the 60 sequences that make up the narrative.
