Description:

Between the skyline of a modernist city and the edge of a spaceship from the 70s, the installation by Ekaterina Vasilyeva deploys in the space in a circular movement. Articulated around a harrowing vision of urbanism, this work is logically following the performance Augenmusik of Ekaterina Vasilyeva, which took place in Paris in June 2016. For this performance, 24 persons passed through the city, starting from the doors of Paris. Each walker held an emergency light working. This work is the final reflexion about this contextual action. It repeats the geometrical form of the city and even becomes self-referential.

The royal blue light of the emergency lights, which in turn looks like catastrophes buildings inspection on permanent alert, creates an hypnotic effect. The spectator who is faced to it enters into a state of trance.

The physical sound disappears and only the colour is now heard. "To hear with eyes belongs to love's fine wit".
