Description:

Based on contingency, Slobodan Stosic's interests question the responsibility of an image and contemporary art as a speculative opportunity. His project 'The Voice Imitator' draws on theoretical ideas formulated by Deleuze in his essay 'Bartleby ou la formule'; and leads the Serbian artist to develop a statement on copying, imitation, representation and the very notion of a work of art. The underlying idea is inspired by Felix Guatarri of a collective assembly of enunciation. They are presented here by drawings on passepartout, inspired by images or texts, but always in a truncated representation.
