Description:

These two portraits of Beuys are strictly identical, no deviation, and yet the eye detects or invents differences.

Revisiting the Double Portraits series, the artist reprises its core premise:

two rigorously identical prints which, when juxtaposed, appear to show subtle differences — including in their psychological character.

Whereas the original series relied on preexisting archival material, the Beuys version employs a digital application that alters the temporality of an image, here through rejuvenation.

The resulting work blends archive and fiction, its apparent veracity unsettled by the effect of duplication.
